Abstract	The increase of refugee status claiming immigrants in Canada has led to a review of the immigration policy concerning this group. This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a humanitarian and generous refugee policy and questions of balancing efficiency with procedural fairness to claimants. Gives a chronology of events since 1969.

Résumé	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (●). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fiched product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquérir les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

“How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?”

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

“Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?”

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back.
Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

100 Mile House Timber Supply Area : timber supply review discussion paper

Victoria : Ministry of Forests, British Columbia Forest Service, 1995. 12 p. : ill.. MICROLOG 95-03870 (1 fiche)

This review examines the impacts of current forest management practices on the timber supply, economy, environment, and social conditions of the 100 Mile House Timber Supply Area in British Columbia. The review describes the timber supply review process, the natural resources and socio-economic profile of the area, and current forest management practices. It then provides a timber supply forecast along with an examination of the critical factors affecting that forecast, including management practices, size of the timber harvesting land base, and possible opportunities to increase the timber supply. The review concludes with an assessment of the environmental and socio-economic impacts of timber harvesting in the study area.

Accidents, convictions and demerit points : an Ontario driver records study : accident prediction models for older drivers

By B. Persaud...et al. Toronto : Ministry of Transportation, Safety Policy Branch, Safety Research Office, 1994. 32 p. : Bibl. ISBN 0-7778-1703-9 MICROLOG 95-03768 (1 fiche)

The current demerit point system used in Ontario since 1959 allocates points to traffic offences according to the offence's perceived seriousness. In an earlier study, the authors built models to predict a driver's accident potential based on age, gender, conviction record, and accident history. Weights were assigned to offences in proportion to the extent each offence increased the probability of the driver being involved in an accident. In the present study, the task was to extend the work to the specific population of older drivers. The same 16 models used in the earlier study were calibrated and their performance was evaluated, comparing the results using the current demerit point scheme as a basis for grouping of convictions with the results obtained by weighting all pointable offences equally.

Achieving infrastructure cost efficiency/effectiveness through alternative planning approaches

Marshall Macklin Monaghan Ltd. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation ; Canadian Home Builders' Assn ; London, Ont. : University of Western Ontario, 1992. 91 p. : ill. On cover: Workshop, Infrastructure and Housing : challenges and opportunities. MICROLOG 95-03908 (1 fiche)

A growing number of agencies are influencing the land development process. By working in isolation, they take a sectoral approach to land development issues that is ill-suited to make the social, economic, and environmental tradeoffs necessary in any development decision. With a view to achieving infrastructure cost efficiency and effectiveness, this paper examines the opportunities to develop and redevelop land in a more comprehensive manner. The modified planning standards addressed focus on reducing land area requirements per housing unit in order to realize per-unit savings and other benefits associated with more compact development. The paper also examines the efficient use of subdivision design standards, presents a financial analysis of the benefits of efficient and effective planning and engineering standards, considers community joint-use facilities, and identifies barriers to change.

The properties of the clay-based sealing materials in a nuclear fuel waste disposal vault will influence the corrosion behaviour of copper containers. One of the most important of these properties is the ability of the clay fraction of the buffer material immediately surrounding the container to adsorb dissolved Cu(II). This study was conducted to determine distribution coefficients for Cu(II) under conditions that closely simulate those expected in a nuclear fuel waste disposal vault. Of particular interest were the nature of the adsorption isotherm (linear or non-linear) and its dependence on temperature. In addition, the effect of clay consolidation on the extent of copper adsorption was investigated by performing experiments on loose and compacted sodium-bentonite.

The quillback (Carpiodes cyprinus) is a large iktobine sucker common to much of North America. Despite its widespread occurrence, it has been the subject of little scientific investigation; age and growth data are limited and none are available for Canadian populations. The main objective of this study was to validate age determination and infer growth rates for individuals for a population of quillback from Dauphin Lake, Manitoba. The investigators attempted a validation of age determination with pelvic fin rays and carried out a comparative assessment of fin ray, vertebra, operculum, and otolith ages in order to determine accurate aging techniques. Once acceptable techniques were developed, growth rates and longevity of individuals were estimated and results are presented.

Air requirements and related parameters for masonry heating systems

By Norbert Senf. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Research Division, 1994. 26 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-03320 (1 fiche)

Masonry heaters are woodburning appliances that can store heat in a thermal mass for 12-24 hours after burning a 10-20 kg wood charge rapidly with a liberal air supply. The process allows cordwood fuel to be burned with very low emissions of atmospheric pollutants, but it is not clear how much air they draw from the house during operation. This research was designed to answer that question. Various aerodynamic parameters were measured on five different contraflow masonry heaters using the CMHC duct test rig. Air consumption data was obtained under a variety of operating conditions. Air leakage was investigated in two heater systems, as were the tailout (diedown) characteristics. The air leakage on four types of masonry heater firebox doors was also tested. The report also includes a description of the WOODSIM simulation of house depressurization.

The seasonal ice cover over the Newfoundland shelf poses a threat to safe operation of marine shipping, fishing activity, and hydrocarbon exploration. Sea ice programs are investigating, through field programs and numerical modeling, the seasonal variability of pack ice properties. One of these programs explores the use of the Electromagnetic (EM) induction technique for measuring the thickness of pack ice. This report describes a post-processing project carried out on a dataset gathered during a field program conducted off the Newfoundland coast in March 1992. It includes a substantial amount of original material relating to the analysis and presentation of Ice Probe data gathered during the 1992 St. Anthony survey. After describing the field program, instrumentation, and data collection techniques, results for the landfast and pack ice are presented. A 2D ridge keel geometry estimation is presented and tested on data from a small ridge located on landfast ice. Appendices list identification, time, and location information for all survey data, broken out as 1 km segments, and standard plots of all survey data.

Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. (AECL) is assessing a concept for disposing nuclear fuel waste in a vault deep in plutonic rock of the Canadian Shield. For assessment of the post-closure or long-term phase of the concept, AECL developed the CC3 (Canadian Concept generation 3) model to describe a hypothetical disposal system that includes a disposal vault, the local geosphere, and the biosphere in the vicinity of any discharge zones. The biosphere model in CC3 is called BIOTRAC (Biosphere Transport and Consequences). This document reviews the BIOTRAC specifications, which were developed over a seven-year period and were subjected to numerous walkthrough examinations to ensure that the intent of the model developers would be correctly specified for transformation into FORTRAN code. The specifications consist of a data dictionary; sets of synopses, data flow diagrams, and minispecs for the component models of BIOTRAC (surface water, soil, atmosphere, and food chain and dose); and supporting calculations (interface to the geosphere, consequences, and mass balance).

AECL Research is assessing a concept for disposing of CANDU nuclear fuel waste in a vault deep in plutonic rock of the Canadian Shield. A computer program called the Systems Variability Analysis Code (SYVAC) was developed as an analytical tool for the postclosure long-term assessment of the concept as well as for environmental assessments of other systems. SYVAC3, the third generation of the code, is an executive program that directs repeated simulations of the disposal system described by the Canadian Concept generation 3 (CC3) models of the vault, the local geosphere, and the biosphere. The CC3 vault model is a computer program that simulates the performance of the engineered barriers of a reference disposal system. This report describes the guidelines for CC3 vault submodel specifications; gives a synopsis of the vault submodel; and describes the data flow diagrams, the minispecifications, the vault data dictionary according to short name, the vault data dictionary math symbol vs short name, and the joint data dictionary.

Groundwater is important to fish habitat for reasons such as creating baseflows, generating opportunities for reproduction, and moderating stream temperatures. When implementing any development that may disturb the groundwater resource, due consideration must be given to protect and maintain groundwater resources in order to protect and maintain fish habitat and fisheries. This report reviews the relationship between groundwater and fish habitat and discusses potential development impacts on groundwater resources through examples of geological and hydrological scenarios. It also presents a general framework and logic tree for groundwater protection strategies and an approach for assessment of potential impacts of land use changes on groundwater resources as related to fisheries habitat.

Awareness of risk and self restricted driving in older drivers

Various abilities that deteriorate with age are important to driving. Most older drivers recognize their own reduced abilities and compensate for them to some degree. This report details a study which developed and pilot tested a self-report measure of senior drivers' awareness of their own abilities and risks, and compensations to reduce their risks. The study also assessed the effects of age on the ability to compensate and recommends methods to validate the self-report test against objective tests of driving performance and underlying abilities. A review of the literature identified testing methods for risk measurement in elderly drivers. Qualitative background information was gathered from senior drivers, trainers, and testers. The self-report instrument developed is called the Senior Driver Research Inventory, and a revised version of this instrument was applied in a pilot test on senior drivers age 50 to 79. The report presents results from the 167 completed inventories obtained from the pilot test and evaluates the effectiveness of the inventory as a measurement tool.

In this report, we describe methods for solving economic models when expectations are presumed to have at least some element of consistency with the predictions of the model itself. We present analytical results that establish the convergence properties of alternative solution procedures for linear models with unique solutions. We discuss briefly the extension of our convergence results to applications with non-linear models, but the strong analytical conclusions for linear systems do not necessarily carry over to non-linear systems. We illustrate the analytical discussion and provide some evidence on comparative solution times and on the robustness of the procedures, using simulations of a simple, linear model of a hypothetical economy and of two much larger, non-linear models of the Canadian economy developed at the Bank of Canada.

The focus of the plan is on eliminating access by bears to human food and garbage and on managing visitor activities in areas of high seasonal bear use. The plan describes management actions for staff training, visitor information, facility location and design, food storage, and garbage handling. Decision criteria are given for determining whether a bear becomes a problem bear. The plan provides stepwise procedures to ensure that causes, and not just symptoms, of problems are treated.

This report intends to provide a preliminary investigation of options for a waterfront park in Birch Cove on the west side of Bedford Basin, just north of Halifax. Public use of this area of the Basin has been minimal due to the presence of a railway line and to private land ownership. The investigation examines three options for the proposed park: a pathway option, a multi-use option, and a mixed-use commercial recreational option, with the theme of the park focusing on maritime recreation. Design issues discussed include access, creation of new land by filling part of the Basin, land ownership and water lots, and costs. The appendix includes a historical review of the Bedford Basin/Birch Cove area. AP MU PL SC

Bogie mécano-soudé destiné au transport interurbain : rapport final, phase II : prototype

Ce rapport résume le travail accompli au cours de la phase II du projet. Les travaux d'ingénierie ont essentiellement consisté à rendre en détail, sur dessins, l'information nécessaire à la fabrication des diverses pièces du bogie. Les principales activités reliées à la fabrication et à l'assemblage des bogies ont été l'approvisionnement en matériel, la conception et la fabrication de l'outillage, la rédaction des cahiers de montage, l'élaboration des procédures de soudage et de tests, la fabrication et l'assemblage des pièces unitaires, la réalisation du recuit de détentionnement, l'usinage et la peinture des châssis, et le montage final des composantes sur les bogies. Enfin, les essais se sont divisés en deux groupes. Les essais de structure, avaient pour buts de vérifier la bonne tenue des éléments en simulant, grâce aux essais de fatigue, l'effet des divers chargements rencontrés sur une période de 30 ans de service. Les essais sur voie, du second groupe, ont servi à vérifier le comportement des bogies sur les voies et, encore une fois, la bonne tenue des composantes du bogie.

The Quebec government has said it would try to negotiate an economic association with the rest of Canada in the event of a referendum vote in favor of sovereignty. Such an association would be essential since the Quebec manufacturing sector depends on markets in, and trade with, the rest of Canada. This paper analyzes the existing trade relations between Quebec and the rest of Canada, possible future trade relations of a sovereign Quebec under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the North American Free Trade Agreement, and the possibility of maintaining current business relationships between a sovereign Quebec and the rest of Canada.

Three phases of the plan have been completed and the fourth is now underway. As part of this phase, a Citizen's InfoPAC & Opinion Poll was delivered to all Calgary households in November 1994. The InfoPAC informed residents of issues to be faced in planning for future transportation needs and provided them with the opportunity to comment on the options being considered. The same survey was also administered via telephone to a panel comprised of randomly selected Calgary households. This report discusses the results of the mail survey and the telephone survey, giving respondent profiles and addressing issues such as mobility and costs, land use, likelihood of transit usage, roadway improvements, downtown commuting, and maintaining good air quality.

This study provides important empirical background to the continuing debate on Canadian industrial policy and trade. The analysis is based on primary data derived from a unique survey of individual firms, both Canadian and foreign-owned, conducted early in the 1981-1982 recession. The main purpose of the study is to assess whether recent changes in tariffs, exchange rates, wage rates, and other factors in Canada and the world economy suggest the need for any significant modification in the earlier analyses and conclusions. The study presents prior evidence on costs, specialization, and trade; assesses current costs and productivity, and presents new information on how increased exports and specialization would affect cost performance and international competitiveness; examines non-production costs and other non-cost influences on specialization and export performance; and suggests strategies for the private sector to consider in order to survive in the changing trade environment of the 1980s.

CASTONE, composite panel cladding

Castone Industries Inc. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, 1994. iii, 68 p. : ill. MICROLOG 95-03321 (1 fiche)

CASTONE is a panel building product simulating natural stone or any textured surface that was developed and tested in 1989. A rigorous and independent testing program was undertaken in 1990, the results of which are summarized. In May 1993, the CASTONE project was revived and a second phase of product development was begun to address several problems. The new product saw a change in materials formulation and product dimensions and a new installation system to combine ease of installation with system integrity. A comprehensive testing program was designed to determine the coefficient of thermal expansion; test for stress cracks from the manufacturing process and long-term weathering, extended freeze-thaw cycle, water infiltration and penetration, adherence, flexibility, and water absorption of the joint material, adhesion of surface cementitious material to polyurethane core, and mechanical fastening system; and examine the kinetics of cement curing. This report describes the research and development background of the product and its prototype development; and gives an assessment and interpretation of test results.

The Causes of unemployment in Canada : a review of the evidence

By Stephen S. Poloz. Ottawa : Bank of Canada, 1994. v, 25 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Bank of Canada ; 94-11 ISSN 1192-5434) ISBN 0-662-22803-0 MICROLOG 95-03435 (1 fiche)

This paper reviews various competing theories of structural unemployment and considers whether they may be used to explain any of the rise in unemployment experienced by Canada during the most recent economic cycle. The central message that emerges is that one should take into account multiple possible structural explanations when forming judgments about the non-accelerating-inflation rate of unemployment (the NAIRU). Furthermore, the degree of uncertainty associated with existing empirical work suggests that one should allow for a range of NAIRU estimates in reaching an understanding of economic developments. A balanced assessment of the available methodologies suggests that the NAIRU has risen somewhat during the 1990s, mainly because of a steep of a steep rise in the rate of payroll taxation. Nevertheless, the paper concludes that this rise in the NAIRU is likely to be temporary, both because the payroll tax effect ought to be digestible over time and because some reforms to the unemployment insurance system have already been implemented.

The question of whether or not the existing currency union would survive a secession by Quebec is inherently difficult because it has a circular element. A central theme in the pages of this document is that the ease with which the union can be maintained depends to a considerable extent on confidence, but that confidence will depend on how easy the task is. This document explores the strains that would afflict the currency union in the event of a secession by Quebec, and puts forward a list of institutions and arrangements that would help to preserve the union.

Characteristics of the Annapolis Basin, Nova Scotia, lobster fishery in relation to proposed marine aquaculture development

Aquaculture development proposals being considered for the Annapolis Basin have raised concerns over potential impacts on existing fisheries. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans accordingly initiated a project to provide baseline information on the Annapolis Basin system and profiles of its traditional fisheries. This report describes a series of studies which document fishing patterns used by traditional fishers exploiting the American lobster (Homarus americanus) resource within the Basin, lobster population size structure as inferred from trap sampling and in-situ collections by divers, and lobster movement patterns revealed by a mark-recapture study.

The main objectives of this study were to determine how certain trace elements are distributed in mine tailing systems by examining parameters such as pH and presence of iron oxyhydroxides and sulfides, and to determine how the aging effect can affect the chemical speciation and redox transformations of those trace elements. The investigators collected fresh and old tailings from different sites at the Stanleigh Mine waste management area in Elliot Lake. Experimental procedures included core sectioning, x-ray fluorescence, sequential leaching analysis, and redox simulation. This report presents the study results, including total concentrations of elements in leach fractions and tailings, pyrite content, and the relation between redox potential and pH in exposed tailing cores of different ages.

As a first step toward developing a toxicity testing program tailored to the Fraser River Basin, the Fraser Pollution Abatement Office initiated a pilot wastewater characterization study in April and May 1992. The study sampled effluent from Annacis Island Wastewater Treatment Plant, final effluent from Northwood Pulp and Timber Ltd. kraft pulp mill, and urban runoff from a Vancouver storm sewer. A flow-weighted composite from each site was subjected to duplicate chemical analysis to identify the main components and toxicological testing with an array of acute and chronic bioassays. This report provides analysis and interpretation of the data. Toxicity data were evaluated to identify dose-response relationships between constituents of the effluent and toxicity test results, and the toxicity and chemistry data were interpreted in the larger context of the potential effects of each effluent on the Fraser River ecosystem. Churchill River diversion : effects on benthic invertebrates in lakes along the lower Churchill and the diversion route

Diversion of 75% of the long-term mean flow of the Churchill River into the Nelson catchment for hydroelectric power generation was completed by summer 1977. The diversion caused a major loss of river flow through Lower Churchill lakes and raised lake levels in the Nelson catchment. These changes, in combination with the geography of the northern Manitoba area, produced different sets of circumstances for the study of benthic invertebrates. This report describes a study of the responses of the benthic invertebrates to these sets of circumstances. The study also tested predictions made in the original environmental impact assessment. The researchers determined changes in the benthic invertebrate community after the diversion by comparing total mean standing crops and taxonomic composition of collections between reference lakes and lakes affected by the diversion. The study results include description of the physical and biological characteristics of the various lakes examined. CA CF LS MS ND NR SC

Escapement is the number of mature salmon that avoid marine fisheries and return to freshwater to spawn. Accurate estimates of escapement are needed for proper fishery management and for monitoring of the effects of habitat change. For coho salmon, generating reliable estimates of escapement is difficult since coho do not occur in high densities and their cryptic coloration makes them hard to see. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans has been conducting research on the use of capture-recapture and area-under-the-curve methods to estimate coho escapement to several streams near Nanaimo. This report presents results from the Department's 1993 coho salmon escapement estimation studies in several streams near Nanaimo, with summaries of results from previous years.

This study was performed to determine the acute toxicity of the water soluble fractions of 35 oils to Daphnia magna. It was conducted from January 1991 to March 1992 in two groups. The first 16 oils were tested in 1991 and analyzed for petroleum hydrocarbon concentration using fluorescence spectroscopy and GC purge and trap analysis. The 19 oils tested in 1992 were tested for lethality in the identical manner but fluorescence analysis was discontinued and GC purge and trap analysis was replaced by GC head space analysis. This report summarizes the methods used in measuring the acute toxicity of the oils and the results obtained.

AECL is evaluating a concept for disposing of nuclear fuel waste from CANDU reactors deep in plutonic rock of the Canadian Shield. As part of this evaluation, models of the physical, chemical, geological, and biological processes that could occur in a sealed disposal vault designed to limit transport of contaminants to the accessible environment were developed. The mathematical models of the transport of radionuclides and toxic chemicals from nuclear fuel waste are incorporated into a computer model named the Systems Variability Analysis Code, Generation 3, and Canadian Concept Model, Generation 3 (SYVAC3-CC3). The report presents the data in the master database used by SYVAC3-CC3 for the postclosure assessment of deep geological disposal, derived from a major program of laboratory and field studies conducted by AECL Research over the past 15 years. The data represents characteristics of a hypothetical vault, certain geologic characteristics of the Whiteshell Research Area, and a general surface environment with a human population living a rural lifestyle on a portion of the Canadian Shield in central Canada.

This paper describes the development of a parametric model that expresses sorption of trace amounts of radioactive and chemically toxic elements from groundwater on geological material as a function of the concentration of the trace element and the total dissolved solids concentration of the groundwater. This model, with its own database, was used to provide sorption coefficients for a contaminant transport model used in performance assessment calculations for a case study of a hypothetical nuclear fuel waste disposal concept in an extensively characterized intrusive rock formation, the Lac du Bonnet batholith. The sorption database in the report is based on laboratory results, literature surveys, and, for elements for which no data is available, sorption data for their chemical homologs. The report describes the arguments used to apply sorption data obtained on unconsolidated material to contaminant transport through intact rock. Data are presented for the sorption of 39 elements on three rock types and on 13 primary and secondary materials, under oxic and anoxic conditions.

This report presents two standalone sets of amended boundaries that the Team developed from the results of the review. One set has a high compliance with the boundary adjustment objectives and criteria of the original terms of reference of the review. The second set focuses on balancing the submissions of the two major participating sectors in the regional land use debate, the forest sector and the environmental sector, while meeting the broader objectives of the terms of reference. For each Protected Area, the report outlines the review issues of interest and the boundary options considered.

It argues that in the current dangerous and unstable world, these three processes are undergoing changed demands, which brings each into closer relationship with the others. Underlying this report is the premise that the synergistic relationships among these three processes can further contribute to international security, through both improved effectiveness and better use of limited resources. The study also emphasizes that the roles of the United Nations and other international bodies could be expanded and harmonized to contribute to greater transparency and security.

The Alberta agricultural ministry, along with the Alberta Egg Marketing Board, initiated a provincial cost study in 1983 to monitor the relationship between the national cost and the provincial cost. This report is the summary of the latest year of that study. It provides an analysis of the results in terms of income, variable costs, pullet costs, feed costs, labour costs, other cash expenses, cost of capital, returns, management and a management profile. Information on the national survey is included. This report was prepared from farm records of a selected number of Alberta egg producers who voluntarily

Counselling for First Nations students : a research summary report

By R. Vance Peavy. Victoria : Ministry of Education, 1994. 9 p. MICROLOG 95-03817 (1 fiche)

This study examined the reasons why (or why not) First Nations students use counselling services offered by schools. The research was guided by three specific questions: which factors inhibit or encourage Aboriginal student participation in counselling; how counselling is perceived by First Nations students, counsellors, and others; and why some counsellors have rapport with First Nations students and others do not. The research methodology employed the key informant method to gather information from students, counsellors, support workers, and others. This summary document presents the findings of the study in the form of thematic statements compiled from the first-hand accounts of informants. A profile of an effective counsellor and recommendations resulting from the research are included. BC ED NP PR SS

Deriving agents' inflation forecasts from the term structure of interest rates

ISBN 0-662-22889-8
MICROLOG 95-03434 (1 fiche)

In this paper, we use the term structure of nominal interest rates to construct estimates of agents' expectations of inflation over several medium-term forecast horizons. The expectations hypothesis is imposed together with the assumption that expected future real interest rates are given by current real rates. Under these maintained assumptions, it is possible to compare the nominal yields on two assets of different maturities and attribute the difference in nominal yields to differences in expected inflation over the two horizons (assuming a constant term premium). The results for the United States and Canada over the past several years suggest that there is a significant static element to agents' inflation expectations.

Design and development of an integrated, automated heavy vehicle licence plate identification system

The authors were contracted to investigate, design, and develop an integrated weigh station system with the ability to weigh, identify, and pre-clear heavy vehicles at weight enforcement facilities. The work included the design of software and hardware interfaces to integrate the existing Canadian Weigh-In-Motion (WIM) and Automatic Vehicle Identification (AVI) equipment with the new system. The system design was to accommodate data collection and to allow the generation of appropriate reporting for the weighing authorities, while being compatible with the HELP/Crescent System in the United States. For testing and demonstration purposes, the investigators installed two full-scale systems integrated with WIM and AVI at two sites in British Columbia and implemented a partial system integrated only with AVI at a third site. This report describes the implementation results, system evaluation, and system operation. The appendix includes system specifications and a site operator manual.

The mining industry has long recognized the need to minimize employee exposure to sources of hand-transmitted vibration. An earlier project demonstrated that a cushioned handle could be successfully developed for the Joy AL-60 rock drill which would significantly reduce hand-transmitted vibration. This report describes a subsequent project conducted to develop a preproduction version of a marketable cushioned handle which would incorporate the necessary design improvements identified in earlier test programs and which would enhance the low-frequency vibration reduction performance of the handle. The investigators designed and fabricated an improved handle, quantified the reduction in hand-transmitted vibration achieved, evaluated its durability and acceptance by drill operators under normal production conditions, and assessed its potential for large-scale use.

Many forest resource managers have identified a framework and decision support system for the development of consistent silvicultural prescriptions as an important need. Silvicultural prescriptions must be evaluated in terms of specific biological, operational, and financial constraints, but this is difficult given the large number of possible alternatives and external factors. One solution is to adopt an active problem-solving approach to developing a set of silvicultural decision keys to support integrated vegetation management. This report describes the development and use of silvicultural keys for the Brightsand and English River Forests in Ontario. The report examines the specific decision making processes in detail to provide guidance to other resource managers who may wish to develop silvicultural keys for their forests.

In recent years there has been a renewed interest in the devolution of health and social services to more local/regional levels. This report describes the activities and presents the findings of a task force formed in Ontario to address that very issue. The initial mandate of the task force was to implement demonstration projects to assess the actual impact of devolving decision making for health and social services. The task force found that it lacked support for those projects and thus revised its mandate to focus on establishing a workable definition of devolution and on developing an evaluation framework for use in assessing the impact of models of devolution. Task force activities included a review of devolved and decentralized models, an assessment of the degree of support toward devolution in Ontario, a workshop identifying the issues involved in establishing a funding envelope for a region and distributing that envelope within a region, and development of an evaluation framework to guide future research and evaluation of devolution efforts and effects.

This study was conducted to determine whether different walleye stocks were distinguishable from one another using morphometric and meristic characteristics, to examine meristic differences among pond stocks, and to compare meristic characteristics of native walleye stocks to pond-reared offspring. Electrophoresis was also used to examine stock differences. The researchers collected walleye from three lakes in Manitoba and one in Saskatchewan. Eggs were also collected from most of these lakes, incubated in hatcheries, and reared in separate ponds at Dauphin Lake, Manitoba. This report presents the study methodology and results of the walleye stock analyses.

Bottom trawl surveys in the Scotia-Fundy region provide a means of studying the biodiversity of a relatively large marine ecosystem. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans used the Scotia-Fundy summer survey stratification scheme to summarize the relative differences in the finfish diversity of off-shore areas. The scope of the survey database enabled the examination of the total species composition of each area, and the frequency of occurrence for each species, by season (1979-85) and for summer data from 1970-93. By examining seasonal and long-term summer data, it was possible to identify time periods and localities that were the most dynamic or stable in terms of community structure. This report presents results of the trawl surveys and summarizes the relative complexity and dynamics of offshore communities by plots of their respective species composition and the frequencies of occurrence of all species reported by time and season.

Les lois régissant le droit de savoir des collectivités sont des lois qui donnent aux collectivités - notamment à l'industrie, aux organismes de réglementation, aux syndicats et aux groupes environnementaux, ainsi qu'au grand public - la possibilité d'avoir accès aux renseignements détenus par le gouvernement et le secteur privé sur les questions environnementales qui les concernent. Dans ce document, on examine les enjeux relatifs au droit de savoir des collectivités dans le contexte de la Loi canadienne sur la protection l'environnement. On se penche particulièrement sur les points suivants : dispositions législatives régissant le droit de savoir des collectivités; LCPE et droit de savoir des collectivités; renseignements confidentiels des entreprises en vertu de la LCPE; assise législative de l'INRP; et, autres considérations relatives au droit de savoir des collectivités. Dropping out : a literature review, 1988-92

By Stephen B. Lawton. Toronto : The author, 1993. 51 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON06513 MICROLOG 95-03848 (1 fiche)

Review aims to describe the major topics covered in the literature on school dropouts, with special attention to the reasons youth leave school early; analyse the recent literature on these topics; and link this literature to that on the intervention programs meant to keep youth in school and better prepare them for employment. The review focuses on material published between 1986 and 1992 (indexed in 1 or more of 5 data bases and 2 libraries), and identifies 8 categories; reviews of the literature; critiques; models or theories to explain dropout; surveys of dropouts and at risk students; dropout and delinquency; dropout and part-time work; dropout and school characteristics; and intervention programs to reduce dropout. Using the key words 'dropout(s)' and 'décrocheur(s,es)' over 600 individual items were identified. A selection was made of approximately 50 items that, according to the reviewer, provide broad coverage and are of good quality. Provides an annotated bibliography. ED MU ON OR SS

Drug-related deaths in British Columbia, 1981 to 1993

Division of Vital Statistics, 1994. 29 p. : ill., Maps On cover: Feature report. MICROLOG 95-03797 (1 fiche)

This report provides broad-based information on mortality in British Columbia that is directly or indirectly related to drugs (excluding alcohol) at a provincial and regional level. The report also examines the impact of an increased abundance of cheap, powerful heroin, and focuses on the recently publicized increase in drug deaths in 1993 by describing the types of drugs involved, and the age, gender, and regional differences. Other aspects of drug-related death examined include the varying impact of prescription, non-prescription, and illicit drugs and medications upon death, whether as an untoward or adverse effect in therapeutic use or as toxic substances that are accidentally or purposely administered. Data for the study were obtained from Statistics Canada annuals of mortality and from provincial death certificates. BC CI HE PR SS

The Dynamic demand for money in Germany, Japan and the United Kingdom

This paper examines the ability of the linear-quadratic model under rational expectations to explain the dynamic behaviour of broad money aggregates in Germany, Japan and the United Kingdom. In contrast with other previous studies, we estimate the structural parameters by means of the Euler equation, using a limited-information approach that does not require an explicit solution for the model's control variables in terms of the exogenous forcing variables. The empirical results from Japanese and U.K. data provide support for the model, whereas the results from German data do not. CA CO EX ND PS SS

Eau Claire Area Redevelopment Plan -- Proposed

Calgary (Alta.). Downtown Planning Division. Calgary, AB : The Division, 1994. viii, 144 p. : ill., Maps MICROLOG 95-03672 (2 fiche)

Eau Claire is located to the north of the downtown commercial core in Calgary, with its northern boundary along the Bow River comprising parkland that is part of the regional pathway system. The major goal of the proposed Eau Claire area redevelopment plan is to encourage the redevelopment of the area as a primarily residential area, with commercial uses concentrated close to the downtown core. This report presents the statutory document of the Eau Claire area redevelopment plan, along with supporting background information. Aspects of the statutory plan include policies for residential, commercial, and open space land use; environmental, heritage resource, and transportation policies; community and social services; urban design; and implementation of the plan. The background information includes current land use policies, socio-demographic characteristics of Eau Claire, community surveys, and existing infrastructures. AL MU PL SC

In the last several years, we have been bombarded with news outlining the economic plight of the Greater Toronto Area (GTA). We have recently been told that while Ontario and Canada are coming out of the recession, the GTA, our nation's engine, is still sputtering. The whole GTA community is asking questions and looking for solutions. Where have all the jobs gone? Who is addressing this insidious erosion of our economy? Why do we all have concerns, yet no feeling of what to do? This report answers these questions by presenting a speech on the economic forum on the future of the Greater Toronto Area on November 23 to 25, 1994. CO MU ON SS

This report provides an estimate of the costs involved in producing wheat on stubble in the Trochu area under the conventional, reduced, and zero tillage or direct seeding types of conservation tillage. Information for a single field in the total farm operation was collected from 11 farm managers in March 1994 through individual data collection forms and telephone follow-up. The analysis for each farm used the methodology employed in the Canada-Alberta Sustainable Agriculture program. Major costs considered included gross revenue per acre, variable costs per acre, fixed costs per acre, total cost of production per acre, contribution margin per acre, return to land, labour, and management per acre, and opportunity costs.

The Effect of Alternaria blackspot of canola on seed quality and seed yield and studies on disease control : final report

This research was conducted to develop a better understanding of the losses caused by Alternaria blackspot and to identify control measures that could be used by growers in western Canada. The project determined the effects of the fungi Alternaria brassicae, A. raphani, and A. alternata on seed germination, seed quality (green seed, grey seed, chlorophyll and oil content), and seed yield; determined if differences in disease reaction existed between Argentine and Polish canola and among cultivars within each species; studied the effectiveness of foliar fungicide application; studied the efficacy of fungicidal seed treatments in increasing seed germination; identified measures that can be used by growers at harvest time to reduce the impact of the disease; compared levels of seed infection in different years and regions to better understand the influence of environmental factors on disease development; gained a more thorough understanding of pathogen invasion of pods and mode of entry into seeds by conducting laboratory experiments; and determined the longevity of seed-borne Alternaria by testing specific seed samples over a period of years.

The Effect of temperature and precipitation on yield and seed quality of canola : final report

By W.F. Nuttall and R.K. Downey. Regina : Saskatchewan Agriculture Development Fund, 1995. 9 p.
MICROLOG 95-03502 (1 fiche)

This project investigated the effect of temperature and precipitation on Brassica rapa L. protein and oil content. The effect of temperature on days to maturity and chlorophyll content of the seed was established by regression analysis using the Cooperative canola/rapeseed cultivar experiments conducted throughout the Prairie Provinces. Brassica rapa L. cultivars, particularly Tobin and Parkland, were selected to determine if there was a difference in yield among sites in western Canada. A statistical analysis was performed to determine interactions among cultivars, sites, and years affecting yield and quality of seed across western Canada from 1991-93. Mathematical models calculated by regression analyses were developed from temperature and precipitation data and yield and quality of canola information and were used to determine the relationship of maturity of the Westar cultivar of Brassica napus L. to temperature and precipitation.

The framework described and tested in this working document is an initial attempt to systematically assess the differential effects of government policies on the competitiveness of the agri-food sector in two countries. The purpose of this paper is to report on and share the experience gained up to now. The specific objective of the document was to examine the sets of agri-food policies that apply to the chicken and pork industries in Canada and the United States, using the framework to assess the effects on competitiveness of each country's set of policies and compare the effects of the two sets. The study involves two phases. Phase I is a theoretical examination of the effect on competitiveness of general policy categories. Phase II examines the specific policy categories and instruments which are directed at the chicken and pork industries in Canada and the United States to assess their relative effect on the competitiveness of these industries.

The materials in this document are designed to give teachers some ideas of how to raise issues pertaining to unemployment, self-assessment and retraining. These issues are very complex and sensitive. The general approach provides a framework for students to talk about the issues and to develop English language skills that will enable them to cope with these issues more effectively. The materials do not specifically address the topics of job search, resumes, job applications or job interviews. However, these materials help prepare students for those topics by providing them with some of the language and self-assessment skills they need in order to begin a job search. The materials attempt to fill a gap by addressing the issues that face unemployed workers before they begin to look for a new job.

This paper presents a new solution method for the capacitated transportation problem with an entropy type objective function. The algorithm consists of a sequence of balancing iterations on the conservation of flow constraints that may be viewed as a generalization of the RAS algorithm. The paper then uses a linearized proximal approach algorithm, for general convex cost and linear cost transportation problems, to obtain a new class of primal-dual algorithms for solving such problems. The subproblems solved are a sequence of entropy type capacitated transportation problems. Sequential and parallel implementations are presented and evaluated by numerical experiments.

Un rapport préliminaire a été produit à la mi-mars 1994, juste avant la fin de l'exercice. Ce rapport tient compte du fait qu'un autre suicide a eu lieu avant le 31 mars 1994, ce qui élève le total à 24 pour l'exercice 1993-1994, et intègre tous les rapports d'enquête et autres. Après avoir recueilli des renseignements sur les suicides de détenus survenus dans des pénitenciers fédéraux du 1er avril 1992 au 11 mars 1994, on les a comparés aux statistiques de 1991-1992 pour tenter de trouver les causes du taux de suicide plus élevé enregistré dans la population carcérale en 1993-1994. Les principaux points abordés sont les suivants : profil sommaire des suicides commis par des détenus en 1993-1994; comparaisons des résultats; suicides par tranche de 100 000 détenus; version provisoire de l'examen psychologique; caractéristiques des détenus qui se sont suicidés en 1993-1994; et, caractéristiques des détenus qui se sont suicidés en 1992-1993.

Evaluating construction activities impacting on water resources, part III A : handbook for dredging and dredged material disposal in Ontario : legislation, policies, sediment classification and disposal options -- Rev.

Toronto : Ministry of Environment, 1994. iv, 48 p. : ill., Bibl. ISBN 0-7729-4181-5
MICROLOG 95-03770 (1 fiche)

This handbook has been prepared to assist dredging project proponents, Ontario Ministry of Environment and Energy staff, and staff of other regulatory agencies in the selection of safe and appropriate management methods based on dredged material characteristics and current Ministry legislation. The handbook is intended to be a reference for dredging-disposal activities, the details of which may not be required on a routine basis. The handbook reviews federal, provincial, and municipal legislation and policies relating to dredged material, its disposal, and its effects on the environment. It then describes sediment classification and disposal options, including unconfined open-water disposal and disposal in confined facilities. Topics covered include disposal site selection criteria and the design and operation of disposal facilities. A glossary is included.

Evaluation of the PEEP index and recommended toxicity tests for the Fraser River Basin

By Environmental Management Associates and Hydroqual Laboratories Ltd. North Vancouver, BC : Environment Canada, Environmental Protection, Fraser Pollution Abatement Office, 1993. v, 51 p. : Bibl. On cover: Fraser River Action Plan. MICROLOG 95-03536 (1 fiche)

The Fraser Pollution Abatement Office has a mandate to significantly reduce discharges of environmentally disruptive effluents to the Fraser River Basin. One approach being considered is the Potential Effects Probe (PEEP), developed for testing and ranking effluents in the St. Lawrence River Basin. PEEP uses results from four small-volume bioassays, selected to incorporate a range of trophic levels and a variety of acute and chronic endpoints. This study evaluated the applicability of the PEEP index approach to the Fraser River basin using results of a pilot wastewater characterization study undertaken in April and May 1992. Effluent samples included primary treated domestic sewage from greater Vancouver; final effluent from a bleached kraft pulp mill; and urban runoff from a Vancouver storm sewer. A flow-weighted, composite sample from each site was tested for acute toxicity with rainbow trout, Daphnia, and the bacterial luminescence (Microtox) test. A private company also tested the effluents and computed the PEEP index for each.

L'agence avait aussi un mandat implicite : en tant que premier organisme en Ontario à être doté à la fois d'une structure "bipartite" et d'une autorité exécutive, elles était considérée comme le prototype de bipartisme et attentivement observée. Cet examen ministériel de l'Agence porte précisément sur les points suivants : qu'est-ce que le bipartisme; naissance de l'Agence pour la santé et la sécurité au travail; création de l'Agence pour la santé et la sécurité au travail; réponse des syndicats, du patronat et d'autres intervenants; comparaisons avec d'autres institutions au Canada et en Ontario; et évaluations et recommandations générales.

Aims to gain insight into the different contexts and cultures of the school systems of Canada and New Zealand, from the perspective of 2 female teachers on an exchange program. Intends to explore, in general, the concept of international teacher exchange programs as a professional development experience, and understand, in particular, the experiences of the 2 exchange teachers. It also presents how the exchange program and the related activities influenced their professional development. Both teachers kept a journal of their experiences. These journals provided a forum for the teachers to chronicle events as they happened, and to work through and make sense of their experiences, both within the classroom and in broader cultural contexts. The journals were the narrative thread that gave intermittent interviews and mail correspondence.

Of the over 200,000 metric tonnes of cod caught in NAFO Divisions 2J and 3KL in 1982, over 40% was caught during the winter by otter trawlers, gutted and iced at sea, and processed on land from 5-10 days later. Substantial quantities of this landed Northern cod are affected by excessive bruising and/or soft texture. This study was initiated to determine the causes of these problems and to explore ways of improving the quality. DFO personnel, aboard commercial offshore trawlers and ashore, assessed the quality of a large quantity of cod, recording the location of the catch, the depth at which the fish were caught, the time required to haul in the trawl, the amount of fish caught in that tow, and the time that had elapsed since the fish were first brought aboard. Assessments were made by trained and experienced inspection officers using DFO proposed dockside grading standards. At sea, the quality was assessed on a random sample of 20 fish, whereas on land a random sample of 10 fish was used. When the sample was graded, the percentage of each of the four different grades was calculated along with the mean percentages and standard deviations of the grades.

Foamed asphalt technology has been in existence for 30 years but is not well known by many Alberta municipalities. This project involved the construction of a 310m length of arterial roadway in Lethbridge using foamed asphalt stabilized granular base (FASGB) to demonstrate the technology, evaluate the performance of the structure, and determine its utility. The constructed length was divided into five test sections of varying cross-section, with the asphalt concrete (130mm) and subgrade (clayey, sandy silt) layers common to each section. Project work included design, construction, quality assurance, performance monitoring, economic analysis, and derivation of the residential road perspective. Construction work was carried out in August and September 1992. Performance monitoring continued for one year after construction completion.

From campus to classroom : views of teaching and teacher education through the eyes of first year teachers -- Draft

By J. Gary Knowles and Ardra L. Cole. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, Dept. of Applied Psychology, 1992. 52 p. : Bibl. On cover: Presented at the annual meeting of the American Educational Research Association. ONTERIS ON06501
MICROLOG 95-03840 (1 fiche)

Focuses on the transition to teaching from preservice preparation to the first year of fulltime classroom responsibility. Draws on reflective accounts of first year teachers, experiences of preservice teacher educators, and research on teacher education and development. Aims to define a role for beginning teachers in preservice teacher preparation. Presents a series of vignettes of beginning teachers' early experiences while considering the following questions: how might the experience of first year teachers contribute to preservice teacher preparation? What can preservice teachers learn from the experiences of beginning teachers?

The Future of community services in Hamilton-Wentworth : discussion paper

Hamilton, ON : Social Planning and Research Council of Hamilton-Wentworth, 1994. i, 22 p. MICROLOG 95-03600 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

The purpose of this paper is to contribute to discussion and debate about the future of social services in Hamilton-Wentworth. One of the primary functions of the Social Planning and Research Council is to monitor trends in the community and to extrapolate the implications of these trends with respect to the quality of life for the residents of the region. This paper arises out of attempts to monitor trends in the delivery of community services and the environment in which they operate. The paper argues that current trends in service delivery are consistent with a new model of intervention which builds upon the experiences of the past decades and which differs, in fundamental ways, from traditional approaches. The paper also argues that the advantages of this new model may lie in issues of access rather than effectiveness. The paper also continues the work of the Region's Sustainable Development Task Force with respect to the structure of community services.

Toutes les régions du Canada ont subi les effets des glaciations du Quaternaire à plusieurs reprises, et la compréhension de l'histoire de ces glaciations requiert des études géologiques détaillées. Au Québec, les reliefs appalachiens font partie des zones d'intérêt, car, lors de leurs passages, les glaciers y ont dispersés des matériaux dont il est utile de retrouver le site d'origine afin d'aider les études de prospection minière. Le document présenté ici s'inscrit dans les recherches subventionnées par le plan de développement économique Canada-Gaspésie et Bas-Saint-Laurent, volet mines 1983-1988. Il fournit des informations détaillées pour comprendre les événements glaciaires complexes qui se sont succédés au Quaternaire récent dans un secteur jusqu'ici peu étudié. Le bulletin montre comment les données de la géologie glaciaire, de la géochimie minérale et de la géochronologie basée sur le carbone 14 concourent à préciser les hypothèses relatives à l'englacement et à la déglaciation du territoire concerné.

The initial objective of this study was to examine a series of closely spaced boreholes located in central Kipling Township in Ontario to determine whether detailed examination of grain size, color, and texture of selected parts of the Cretaceous Mattagami Formation could provide a basis for a three-dimensional basin and architectural element analysis of a small part of the Moose River Basin. A secondary objective was to attempt to correlate existing information on the physical and chemical characteristics of the Formation deposits with lithological characteristics in order to facilitate exploration and development of kaolin, silica sand, and ball clay deposits in the area. This report describes the resulting lithological observations, the depositional model developed, the stratigraphic reconstruction, and statistical relationships discovered. It also assesses the industrial potential of the kaolin deposits in the study area.

A market exists in Japan and North America for over 400,000 cubic meters of laminated wood (glulam, or glue laminated wood) billet and structural beams annually. This market is growing about 5% by volume every year. This report evaluates the profit potential of a flexible plant capable of supplying these markets. The evaluation includes the following assumptions with regard to the proposed plant: capability of handling billets up to 240 x 480 x 12,000 millimeters; facilities to create laminated products from wood lost in manufacturing; and billets are sold without further upgrading. The report assesses the attractiveness of the billet market for a plant investment in British Columbia, identifies the key success factors for such an operation, develops a business plan, and shows how the concept could be used to extend the product line of an existing operation.

The Forest Landscape Ecology Program has compiled an extensive database of eastern white pine and red pine forests in the Great Lakes-St Lawrence Forest Region of Ontario. Over 6,000 polygons have been mapped and a comprehensive set of attributes derived for each stand. The culmination of this work is the packaging of this information for use in management decision making. This has been accomplished by the development of a self-contained personal computer-based software package called GRASP (GIS-based Ranking System for Pine). This document presents a manual for using GRASP, including system requirements and installation, selection of stand location, customizing tabular data output, adding reference layers to a map, defining stand attributes, weighting and scoring of attributes, grouping composite scores, reweighting, and adding custom attributes. Two hypothetical case studies illustrate how GRASP can be used for problems in wildlife preservation and timber harvesting.

This report presents summaries of data collected through a program initiated in 1988 to assess the fin quality and growth characteristics of parr and smolt reared at the Department of Fisheries and Oceans Salmonid Enhancement Centres and their associated facilities. Sample groups were defined annually based on differences in rearing regimes, genetic origin, size grade, and age. A random sample of 80-100 fish was taken from each group for measurement and condition assessment. The bulk of the report consists of tables of quality evaluation data collected from 1989 to 1993 for Atlantic salmon smolt and parr.

This document presents a plan for the Halifax Common, including goals, policies, design concepts, and actions to guide future planning and development. The first part of the plan considers the entire Common within the original 235-acre land grant of 1763. The plan deals with this area as a public place with diverse uses, as a place with special character and historic significance, as part of a vehicular and pedestrian circulation system, and in relationship to downtown and surrounding neighborhoods. The second part of the plan focuses on city-owned land and public open space within the larger Common, including recommendations on land acquisition, landscaping, parkland use, safety improvements, facilities design and relocation, and historic site preservation. The plan then proposes priorities for implementation and suggests options for protective legislation.

There is a constant threat of violence and abuse in the lives of many people with disabilities, and a seemingly indifferent acceptance of such violence and abuse among society at large. This study examines the problem of violence and abuse toward disabled persons, using information from an extensive literature review, a review of case law and federal/provincial statutes, interviews with persons with disabilities, most of whom had been victimized, and interviews and focus groups with service providers, police, advocates, and family members of persons with disabilities. Topics examined include the particular forms of violence and abuse experienced by the disabled, the precipitating factors involved and the demographics of those at risk, the disclosure and identification of violence and abuse, responses to violence and abuse, the legislative framework involved, and case law on violence and abuse against persons with disabilities. Appendices include statistical tables and descriptions of the study methodology.

This study is designed to analyze trends in heavy oil investment, production, economics, and markets, with a focus on determining the causes for a lack of investment in the Saskatchewan heavy oil sector and on evaluating the opportunities and constraints for long-term sustainability of this industry. After a chapter providing background information on the Saskatchewan heavy oil industry, this report examines heavy oil markets in Canada and the United States as well as refinery capacities. It then details the logistics of shipping heavy oil from producing areas to the various markets and establishes the economics of Saskatchewan heavy oil production. Finally, it discusses issues affecting the heavy oil industry, including the need for environmental safeguards, and summarizes the trends and issues discussed.

The responsibility for developing and administering certification training was vested with the Workplace Health and Safety Agency, which was established by the Ontario Occupational Health and Safety Act. After two years of program development, the agency launched its Core Certification Training Program in April, 1993. The CCT is a generic course, portable from one industry to another and dealing with a variety of aspects of occupational health and safety practice. The curriculum was designed to achieve two main objectives: to deal with a variety of topics relevant to all industries equally; and, to provide a broader knowledge of OHS by touching on certain issues which, although they can have different levels of relevance depending on the trainees' industry, are nonetheless a concern for most workplaces. This document provides highlights of an initial evaluation of CCT. Topics covered are: methodology; characteristics of trainees; registration process and information; detailed assessments of weeks 1, 2 and 3 of training; and, overall evaluations.

The OHS legislation in Ontario encourages workplaces to resolve internal needs for OHS programming through JHSCs, with managers and workers sharing a number of rights and responsibilities. Some broader policy-related suggestions are made on the basis of the survey results, touching on many aspects of the IRS, including workplace inspections and investigations of accidents.

This study consolidates the relevant information about smelt in Chaleur Bay, including historical landings, sampling of index landings, juvenile and adult herring surveys, groundfish surveys, and the use of hydrographic systems by smelt.

For many years, researchers in Canada have been concerned about why some seniors leave their homes unnecessarily and move into nursing homes or other institutions. This paper examines some of the implications of the rapidly growing senior population in Canada. It identifies some of the most common problems seniors face in their homes and suggests how seniors can adapt their homes to overcome these problems. It also shows how seniors can go about identifying the types of adaptations that are best for them and suggests how health care and support service providers and the medical profession can help seniors remain in their homes for as long as possible.

The study focuses on financial options which have a reasonable chance of fitting into the existing Canadian finance system. It identifies options in five key areas: options which could reduce financing costs such as reducing mortgage interest rates; options which could reduce the size of initial mortgage payments such as flexible debt repayment options; options which could reduce downpayment requirements such as lower borrower equity options; options for new funding sources such as using RRSPs to finance mortgages or downpayments; and, new forms of secured lending such as reverse mortgage lending. The study evaluates the feasibility of the various options identified.

Pacific hake is a migratory species that spawns annually in United States waters off California and feeds during the summer months from northern California to Queen Charlotte Sound. Pacific hake is a valuable resource that is harvested by annual fisheries in the U.S. and Canada, with quotas fully subscribed in recent years. Hydroacoustic estimates of abundance of this stock are used in assessments and in studies of the factors influencing distribution. This report describes the most recent survey of the area from the Canada/United States border northward along the west coast of Vancouver Island to Triangle Island and into Goose Island Gully in Queen Charlotte Sound to determine the distribution and abundance of hake. Mid-water trawls were conducted to verify acoustic targets and to examine the hake size distributions and age compositions as a function of latitude. Hake distributions were also examined in relation to plankton aggregations and oceanographic parameters. Additional research examined hake behaviour, acoustic survey strategy and variability in acoustic abundance estimation.

The Municipal-Industrial Strategy for Abatement (MISA) is an initiative to abate wastewater discharges in Ontario with the ultimate goal that of the virtual elimination of persistent toxic contaminants. After the completion of the MISA monitoring for the iron and steel sector, this project developed an inventory of best available technology (BAT) for water pollution control and identified capital and operating costs to retrofit BAT systems in Ontario mills. The study developed an inventory of BATs currently in use in steel mills in the United States, Ontario, and selected countries in Europe and Asia; selected critical parameters to be used for the assessment of BAT treatability; determined the current status of water pollution control in Ontario's iron and steel sector; and determined the means of applying each model BAT to the appropriate process category in each Ontario mill and predicted the expected effluent quality.

The meeting confirmed the need to develop a national strategy for quality and effectiveness in health care. An inventory of quality initiatives across Canada was commissioned by Health and Welfare Canada. This document is the result and is comprised of three main components: the first one examines several current developments in quality and effectiveness in health care-total quality management, practice guidelines, outcome measurement, and utilization management; the second one provides a snapshot of initiatives underway within national, provincial and territorial governments, as well as within many health care organizations and facilities; and, the last one provides an analysis of the themes and the resultant conclusions.

Inventory of services to respond to abuse of older people in British Columbia

By Zena S. Katz and Connie Chapman. Victoria : Ministry of Health and Ministry Responsible for Seniors, Office for Seniors, 1994. 87 p.
MICROLOG 95-03816 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this study is to document what currently exists in British Columbia to respond to situations of abuse of older people. The investigators sent a questionnaire to 1,162 groups, agencies, and individuals across the province most likely involved in providing services to older people. This document summarizes and discusses the survey findings with respect to such matters as geographic area served, type of organization, type of client group, services provided, referrals, coordination efforts, training, expert resources, barriers to effective response, service enhancements needed, number of situations of abuse of older people, and service (if any) to adults under 65. The study also resulted in an inventory of services addressing the abuse of older people. This inventory is appended, listing service providers, addresses, telephone numbers, and type of service provided by region.

Victoria : Ministry of Housing, Recreation and Consumer Services, 1995. 31 p.
ISBN 0-7726-2394-5
MICROLOG 95-03812 (1 fiche)

To provide extra protection to consumers in the rental housing market, recent changes in the British Columbia Residential Tenancy Act include a new rent protection system. This system provides a way for tenants to dispute unjustified rent increases while giving landlords assurance that they will get a fair return on their investment. With the system's introduction of a new notice of rent increase form, the system encourages better communication about the reasons for rent increases. This guide was written for landlords whose tenants have filed for arbitration to dispute a rent increase. The first part of the guide explains the rent protection system and includes questions and answers to help clarify the effects of the new system. The second part gives instructions on how to fill out a statement of rent increase information form. A sample form is included.

Alberni Inlet has been part of an annual monitoring program of marine waters around coastal pulp mills since 1976. Water quality records were kept of temperature, salinity, dissolved oxygen, and colour relative to water depth. Marine sediment was collected for trace metals, volatile residue, particle size, and chlorophenol analysis. Trawls of fish and crustaceans were collected, identified, and analyzed for trace metals. This report summarizes the sampling done in Alberni Inlet in September 1994, August 1986, July 1988, and August 1990. Methods used for collection and analysis are described and results are presented without analysis and interpretation.

The Workplace Health and Safety Agency came into being, with the passage of Bill 208, in the Summer of 1990. From its beginning, it has been a focus of controversy and dispute. The explicit mandate of the agency is to carry out a range of functions related primarily to training in the area of workplace health and safety. It has also had an implicit mandate: as the first agency established in Ontario to be structured on a "bipartite" basis and to exercise executive authority, it has been closely watched as a prototype of bipartism. Topics covered are: what is bipartism; the birth of the workplace health and safety agency; the development of the Workplace Health and Safety Agency; the response of labour, management and other affected interests; comparisons with other institutions in Canada and Ontario; and, overall assessment and recommendations.

Les données du PIB réel dans les cinq pays d'outre-mer considérés dans cette étude, soit l'Allemagne, la France, l'Italie, le Royaume-Uni et le Japon, sont publiées sur une base trimestrielle et après un délai d'au moins deux mois. Certains autres indicateurs de l'activité économique sont publiés plus fréquemment et plus rapidement que le PIB réel. Ce document présente, pour chacun des pays d'outre-mer, des modèles de prévision du taux de croissance d'un trimestre à l'autre du PIB réel du trimestre en cours (ou terminé, mais dont les données n'ont pas encore été publiées) qui sont d'une grande simplicité et qui utilisent notamment, l'information véhiculée par des indicateurs mensuels de l'activité économique. Une caractéristique essentielle de ces modèles est qu'ils reposent sur des indicateurs sélectionnés sur la base de leur capacité de prévoir l'évolution du PIB réel à la fin des années 80 et au début des années 90.

Multiseason use of plastic soil mulches in vegetable production : final report

By Doug Waterer. Regina : Saskatchewan Agriculture Development Fund, 1995. 8 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 95-03504 (1 fiche)

This study evaluated the feasibility of using plastic soil mulches through two or more vegetable cropping seasons. During the 1993 cropping season, trials were conducted to evaluate black, clear, and wavelength selective plastic soil mulches in the production of direct seeded cucumbers and transplanted melons. All mulches were of the same thickness and produced by the same manufacturer. The mulches were laid with a commercially available mulch layer and normal management and harvest practices were used. No herbicides were used in conjunction with any of the mulch treatments. In the next year, field preparation included only the application of a non-selective herbicide to control weeds between the rows and in the holes and application of nitrogen. Crops included transplanted peppers and melons and direct seeded corn. Status of the mulches was evaluated in the fall of the first cropping season, after the first winter and prior to planting, and in the fall of the second cropping season. At each rating period, the mulches were evaluated for their physical integrity. Timing and total yields of the test crops were determined and notes were taken on crop quality and disease or pest problems.

Data used for the assessment modelling of the Canadian concept for disposal of nuclear fuel waste is mainly based on observations from short-term laboratory and field experiments, although it must apply to periods of 10,000 to one million years. Natural analogs can provide useful data and a qualitative illustration of the interaction of processes and materials in complex natural systems. This report reviews the available natural analog information used in support of the Canadian concept, with particular emphasis on the disposal of used CANDU fuel. The report gives a definition of natural analogs and an overview of the various types of analogs and analog studies; describes the main components of the disposal system, including the vault, the geosphere, and the biosphere, and gives specific examples for each; and describes several comprehensive natural systems that contain a number of features and processes similar to the disposal concept and that are under study by other countries as part of their waste disposal management programs.

As part of a multidisciplinary study to provide background data for assessing the potential effects of hydrocarbon development and production on critical habitats of the Canadian Arctic coastal shelf, the Northern Oil and Gas Action Program sampled the southern Beaufort Sea shelf and coastal bays for a suite of oceanographic variables. Between 1985 and 1988, the Program sampled at from 20 to 63 stations for periods as short as two weeks during months as early as March and as late as September. Throughout 1986 to 1988, continuous irradiance data were recorded at Tuktoyaktuk. During open water, water column continuous irradiance and relative fluorescence were measured on the Beaufort Sea shelf and in Tuktoyaktuk Harbour, and continuous sea surface temperature was determined in Kugmallit Bay. During ice cover, the harbor and Mason Bay were sampled for water column fluorescence and continuous irradiance; on the shelf, stations were sampled for ice algae species composition and abundance, ice chlorophyll concentration, total suspended solids, and continuous irradiance data in relation to snow depth. This report presents the study methodology and results.

Fs 97-13/939E MICROLOG 95-03787 (4 fiche)

As part of a project assessing the implications of hydrocarbon development and production on fish and fish habitat of Arctic estuarine and marine environments, the Northern Oil and Gas Action Program collected samples of meio- and macrobenthos from Tuktoyaktuk Harbour and Mason Bay in March, from 1985 to 1988. Macrobenthos were collected with a modified Van Veen sampler of 0.1 square meter area. Sediment for analysis of meio- and macrobenthos was subsampled from each Van Veen sample using a 15-centimeter long polyvinyl carbonate core. A second core subsample was collected for sediment texture and total organic content analyses. In 1985, seven and six Van Veen samples were collected from the harbor and the bay respectively. In each of 1986 to 1988, for each bay, four Van Veen grabs were collected from the same six stations. Samples were obtained from soft bottom substrate at depth strata of 4-6, 8-10, and over 15 meters, with two stations assigned per depth stratum. This report presents data on benthos abundance and wet biomass in terms of number or mass per square meter.

Fs 97-13/945E MICROLOG 95-03785 (2 fiche)

As part of a project undertaken to provide background data for assessing the implications of hydrocarbon development and production on critical estuarine and marine habitats, the Northern Oil and Gas Action Program collected zooplankton and larval and post-larval fish from Tuktoyaktuk Harbour in the open water seasons of 1984 to 1987. Each of the north and south basins of the harbor were generally sampled twice each year using Wisconsin nets, neuston samplers, and bongo nets from a 12-meter vessel. Wherever possible, the project identified all captured specimens to the species level and determined the life history stage for zooplankton specimens. Other data collected included zooplankton abundance, zooplankton biomass and volume, and fish stomach contents. This report presents the study methodology and results.

Optimization of biological phosphorus and ammonia removal in a combined fixed and suspended growth wastewater treatment system : final report

This project was conducted to optimize design and operational criteria for enhanced biological phosphorus removal and nitrification of ammonia in the fixed growth reactor-suspended growth reactor (FGR-SGR) process. The research completed the investigation of optimum hydraulic retention times for biological phosphorus removal in both the unaerated and aerated phases of the suspended growth components of the FGR-SGR system, including an assessment of the possibility of reducing suspended growth aeration requirements by using oxidized forms of nitrogen rather than dissolved oxygen for biological phosphorus uptake; investigated the effects on biological phosphorus removal and nitrification of varying the internal recycle flow rates; and investigated the optimum solids retention time, or the optimum operating mixed liquor suspended solids concentration, in the suspended growth component of the system for biological phosphorus removal and nitrification-denitrification.

Organic contaminants in forage fish from Toronto area streams

In support of the Metro Toronto Remedial Action Plan and the growing concerns about water quality in Toronto-area watersheds, the Ontario Ministry of the Environment collected samples of young-of-the-year forage fish from selected sites in streams to document the biological availability of organochlorine contaminants and their trends with time. This report presents spatial and temporal trends of organochlorine contaminant residues in forage fish collected from Etobicoke, Mimico, and Highland Creeks and the Humber, Don, and Rouge rivers for the interval 1981 to 1992. The contaminant concentrations reported were derived from whole-fish, composite sample analyses in which each composite sample typically consisted of seven individual fish. Twenty compounds were analyzed, including polychlorinated biphenyls and chlordane. Including polychlorinated biphenyls and chlordane.

This paper studies classical problems arising in the field of parallel performance measures by using the concept of relative burden. Some advantages of this measure over traditional metrics are pointed out. The literature on related measures is reviewed, and it is shown how to generalize and recover some well-known results of parallel performance theory by using the concept of relative burden. The emphasis is on fixed-size optimal performance and scalability. For scalability analysis, the paper generalizes a result due to Gupta and Kumar. A new scalability law is also introduced and compared to other well-known scalability functions.

Letang Inlet, in the Quoddy Region of the Bay of Fundy, is experiencing intense growth in salmon aquaculture. For such development to proceed in the best way, it is necessary to have knowledge of the physical, chemical, biological, and sedimentological processes that affect the supply and consumption of oxygen in the vicinity of the cages and the release, distribution, and removal of wastes. This report provides an overview of the present state of physical oceanographic knowledge as acquired from field measurements and a brief review of the numerical model of currents and water quality developed by ASA Consulting Ltd., including an assessment of its validity and limitations. The latter includes a demonstration of the model's usefulness in providing detailed information on tidal currents and flushing times as well as a quantitative assessment of impact on water quality (reduction in dissolved oxygen and nutrient enhancement) arising from existing and/or expanded salmon farming operations and other waste inputs to the area.

When a nuclear fuel waste disposal vault is sealed, air will be trapped in the pores of the clay-based sealing materials. Oxygen will be the most important oxidizing species for copper containers in a Canadian disposal vault, and an understanding of the mechanism of oxygen reduction on copper is necessary to predict the long-term corrosion behaviour of the containers. This report provides the results of a potentiodynamic study of oxygen reduction on copper. The study was conducted to establish whether H₂O₂ is a stable intermediate of the reduction of oxygen on copper under conditions similar to those expected in a disposal vault. For comparison, studies were also carried out in a non-complexing electrolyte to assess the importance of homogeneous oxidation reactions with Cu(I) in solution. Since the reduction of oxygen can produce OH⁻ at the copper surface, thus increasing the interfacial pH, experiments were carried out with and without a phosphate-based buffer. The use of cyclic voltammetry permits the study of the effect of varying surface conditions on the mechanism of oxygen reduction.

Dissolved oxygen will be the major oxidant of copper containers used for the disposal of nuclear fuel waste deep underground in the granitic rock of the Canadian Shield. Despite widespread use of copper alloys in corrosive environments, the mechanism of oxygen reduction on copper is poorly understood, and there is an even greater lack of reliable kinetic data from which predictions of corrosion rates and potential might be made. This potentiostatic study was conducted to investigate the mechanism of oxygen reduction under conditions simulating those in a nuclear fuel waste disposal vault and to provide kinetic data for use in models to predict the long-term corrosion behaviour of copper containers.

Local search methods used to find good solutions to combinatorial optimization problems have two main weaknesses: an occasional propensity to become trapped in a very poor local optimum and large computational effort. This paper describes a technique that overcomes both weaknesses by exploring solutions that are very different from each other in order to diversify the search, intensifying the search to identify better local optima in a promising region of the set of feasible solutions, and parallelizing the process. The performance of the technique is illustrated for two taboo searches developed for vehicle routing problems. The paper also presents a post-optimization technique that may often improve the solutions obtained. The performance of the new technique is compared to that of the original local searches.

The benthic invertebrates studied in this report, the burrowing mayflies (Hexagenia species) and burrowing amphipods (Diporeia), play an important role in processing and recycling deposited organic matter, and are also important prey for fish. The author obtained samples of these invertebrates from Batchawana Bay, 40 kilometers north of Sault Ste. Marie, in order to perform size-frequency analyses, length-weight regressions, and laboratory experiments. Growth rates of three size classes of Hexagenia limbata and of three sizes of Diporeia hoyi were calculated, and production was calculated for the interval between October 15, 1977 and October 25, 1978. Additional information was collected on gut contents, feeding rates, respiration, and seasonal trends in growth efficiency. This report presents the results of the study.

Le taux de pauvreté monte et descend constamment au Canada depuis 20 ans. Ce rapport présente une image statistique détaillée de la pauvreté au Canada et examine la pauvreté actuelle ainsi que les changements qu'on a pu noter au fil des ans en matière de pauvreté. Il indique aussi les tendances des revenus et des salaires moyens et se penche sur la répartition toujours inégale du revenu. On y trouve entre autres des statistiques sur la féminisation de la pauvreté, la pauvreté selon la province et l'âge, les liens entre le niveau de scolarité et la pauvreté, ainsi que sur la source de revenu principale.

Dans quelle mesure les personnes ayant des incapacités participent-elles au marché du travail? Le premier chapitre présente le cœur de la question : les personnes ayant des incapacités sont sous-représentées dans la population active. Il donne les lignes générales du problème selon le sexe, l'âge, la région géographique, l'occupation professionnelle, etc. Le chapitre 2 donne un aperçu du cadre de la politique générale et des programmes qui peuvent soit aggraver le problème, en créant des barrières et des contre-incitations à l'emploi, soit aider à la résoudre. Les autres chapitres analysent le problème de la faible participation des personnes ayant des incapacités à la population des points de vue suivants : les droits de la personne; les obstacles qu'éleve le marché du travail; les soutiens personnels et la réadaptation; la formation et l'éducation; la prestation des services d'orientation, de placement, d'information et de suivi; et, l'effet des mesures relatives à la sécurité du revenu. Dans le dernier chapitre on présente les gens qui, à cause de l'âge, de la gravité de leur incapacité et de sa durée peuvent s'attendre à rencontrer d'importants obstacles sur le marché du travail, mais qui toutefois travaillent et reçoivent au moins l'équivalent du salaire médian canadien.

Structured settlements in personal injury cases have become increasingly popular in Saskatchewan, as elsewhere in North America, because they provide, via periodic payment of compensation, better protection for the long-term interests of disabled accident victims than the traditional lump-sum payments. While no change in the law was necessary to introduce structured settlements, the courts lack jurisdiction to settle such claims. This report describes structured settlements and judgments in Canadian law; issues and problems, including the mode of funding and security of payments, inflation of protection, conflict of interest, and tax considerations; structured judgments in Canada and other jurisdictions; and proposals for structured judgments legislation. A draft structured judgments act is also included.

Cette étude a pour but de déterminer si l'hypothèse de convergence économique s'applique aux provinces canadiennes. En utilisant les données du produit intérieur brut réel par habitant et de la productivité des facteurs de production entre 1966 et 1992, l'étude montre, à l'aide de deux méthodes distinctes, que l'on ne peut rejeter cette hypothèse. Ce résultat confirme les conclusions auxquelles sont parvenus d'autres auteurs qui ont examiné le phénomène de la convergence entre les provinces canadiennes. La première méthode utilisée consiste à estimer la relation qui existe entre la croissance moyenne et le niveau initial du PIB réel par habitant. Se fondant entre autres sur le problème classique du retour à la moyenne, certains chercheurs ont reproché à cette méthode de ne pas tester adéquatement l'hypothèse de la convergence. La deuxième méthode, quant à elle, consiste à examiner la tendance des écarts observés entre, d'une part le niveau du PIB réel par habitant et de la productivité dans les provinces les plus riches et, d'autre part, le niveau de chacune de ces deux variables dans les autres provinces. L'étude se distingue de celles qui ont été réalisées jusqu'ici sur le sujet par l'utilisation de la deuxième méthode, qui, en plus de contourner les critiques mentionnées ci-dessus, nous a permis d'examiner séparément le comportement de chaque province.

The prostate specific antigen (PSA) test is a blood test that measures the level of a serum protein produced by the prostate gland in men. It is easy to administer and is currently considered the best available test for early detection of prostate cancer. The PSA test was introduced to Saskatchewan in 1990 and its use has grown dramatically ever since. The province's Health Services Utilization and Research Commission identified two key issues reflecting concerns about the PSA test: whether it is an effective and appropriate screening tool for prostate cancer, and how the test should be used on patients with or without symptoms of prostate cancer. The Commission formed a working group to investigate these issues, using reviews of the scientific literature, reviews of recommendations on PSA testing made by professional organizations, focus group interview sessions with men over age 50, surveys of physicians, and PSA test and cancer data. This report presents the study methods and results, as well as recommendations on the use of the PSA test.

Norecol Environmental Consultants Ltd. North Vancouver, BC : Environment Canada, Environmental Protection, Fraser Pollution Abatement Office, 1993. vii, 65 p. : Bibl. On cover: Fraser River Action Plan. MICROLOG 95-03539 (1 fiche)

The Fraser River Action Plan has a key goal to implement a cooperative pollution abatement program to reverse the trend of environmental degradation in the Fraser River ecosystem. The first step towards devising strategies to meet targets is to identify the contaminant sources and the loadings of specific contaminants by characterizing wastewater releases to the Fraser River and its tributaries. This development document defines the parameters to be measured at all sites and source-specific parameters to be monitored at specific industrial, agricultural, or urban sewage treatment sites. The report identifies industry specific parameters for 10 industry groups and provides recommendations.

The Fraser River Action Plan has a key goal of implementing a cooperative pollution abatement program to reverse the trend of environmental degradation in the Fraser River ecosystem. The first task is to identify the sources of specific contaminants through a program to characterize wastewater discharges in the Fraser Basin. The wastewater characterization program addresses major industrial and municipal effluents and point source discharges from lighter industries and agriculture. This methods manual was developed to provide consistent protocols for field sampling and analytical methods to be used in the quantitative assessment. The document outlines guidelines on field sampling procedures for chemical characterization, including sample collection, preservation, processing, and transportation; methods of measuring effluent flow rate; field quality assurance measures; preferred and alternate methods for chemical analyses; data reporting specifications; and collection, analysis, and reporting requirements for effluent toxicity tests. A glossary is included.

Reduction of sawdust in sawmill operations : thin-kerf, twin-circular guided headsaw pilot project : final report

A large number of Ontario sawmills use thick-kerf circular headsaws which convert 9-15% of log volume into sawdust. The over 175,000 tonnes of sawdust produced annually by these headsaws represents a serious waste disposal problem. Forintek has developed a prototype saw guide to enable circular headsaws to be inexpensively retrofitted with thin-kerf circular saws that can reduce sawdust production by 40%. This report describes a pilot project conducted to demonstrate the ability of the Forintek guide to reduce sawdust production in twin-circular sawmills. The report notes the kerf reductions and the changes in resource consumption, product yields, and byproduct yields resulting from the project. The appendix contains the requirements for successful conversion to a thin-kerf circular headsaw and a checklist to assess conversion possibilities.

Regional groundwater flow in the Atikokan Research Area : simulation of 18O and 3H distributions

AECL is investigating a concept for disposing of nuclear fuel waste deep in plutonic rock of the Canadian Shield. As part of the investigation, a model simulation of regional groundwater flow in the Atikokan Research Area (ARA), a fractured plutonic rock environment of the Canadian Shield, was performed. The study related the commonly observed spatial scatter in oxygen-18 and tritium distributions to the recharge, midline, and discharge hydraulic regimes of a three-dimensional regional groundwater flow system in a fractured plutonic rock terrain. Vertical average linear groundwater velocities obtained from a water balance calibration of the ARA flow model were used in conjunction with reasonable values of dispersivity and molecular diffusion coefficients to simulate envelopes of field oxygen-18 and tritium data. Available field data were then plotted to determine their position relative to the simulated envelopes, and thus to ascertain the reliability of the calibrated velocities. The calibration of the regional groundwater flow model of the ARA was refined through this simulation of oxygen-18 and tritium distributions.

The southeast part of the study area is of interest for the Fish Lake copper-gold porphyry deposit which contains a mineable reserve of 9.4 million ounces of gold and 3.5 billion pounds of copper. Field work was performed in fall 1992 and summer 1993, during which 118 till and 26 glacioluvial sediment samples were collected. Detailed sampling was undertaken in areas of known mineralization, such as Fish Lake. This report presents brief notes on study methodology, a summary of the glacial history of the area, and results of the geochemical analysis completed on all samples.

Report of the Regional Libraries Funding Formula Review Committee : meeting the challenges of the 21st century

Nova Scotia. Regional Libraries Funding Formula Review Committee. Halifax : The Committee, 1993. 79 p. MICROLOG 95-03401 (1 fiche)

In March 1993, a regional public libraries funding formula review committee was appointed by the Minister of education to review the funding for regional public libraries in the province. The committee had broad representation from municipalities, regional public libraries, and the Government of Nova Scotia. The need for the review arose because many of the regional public libraries, and the municipalities which support them jointly with the province, had expressed concern about the level of both provincial and municipal funding, as well as the manner in which it is distributed to regional library boards. This document presents the first report of the Libraries Funding Formula Review Committee. The report contains recommendations for funding regional public libraries in Nova Scotia for the twelve month fiscal period beginning April, 1994.

Il laisse entendre que, dans le monde dangereux et instable où nous vivons actuellement, ces processus se transforment parce que les demandes changent, chacun devenant plus étroitement lié aux deux autres. Le rapport suppose en outre que les relations synergiques entre les trois processus peuvent contribuer davantage à la sécurité internationale, en permettant une utilisation plus efficace et plus judicieuse des ressources restreintes. Il souligne également que l'élargissement et l'harmonisation des rôles des Nations Unies et des autres instances internationales favoriseraient la transparence et la sécurité.

This review presents the Saskatchewan Energy Strategy in three sections corresponding to the strategy's three major components. The energy resource development section identifies economic development opportunities associated with Saskatchewan's energy resources. The energy utilization section describes challenges and opportunities to ensure that reliable and competitively priced energy is available to meet future needs of the province. This section considers conventional fuels, energy conservation, alternative energy, and environmental issues. The energy utilities section outlines the role of utilities in Saskatchewan and discusses three issues facing energy utilities: public accountability, selection of future electrical generation options, and emerging trends in the utility sector. A list of relevant background reports is appended.

Semantic modelling : an investigation for a transportation/land use decision support system

Decision support systems provide potentially useful tools for spatial analysis, notably for transportation and land use planning problems. Such systems require the representation of the knowledge behind decision making in a flexible methodological structure. For this purpose, semantic modelling (somewhere between mathematical and linguistic modelling) can model declarative and procedural knowledge. This paper first develops the foundations of semantic modelling through the definitions of its primitives, which are the simplest elements for the representation of objects in encoding knowledge. The paper then demonstrates the semantic modelling method in building a simple transportation/land use decision support system. The paper concludes by discussing some design considerations and application domains in environmental, transportation, and land use planning, as well as possible research extensions.

Forest managers are becoming increasingly interested in lower-cost alternatives to planting as a means of renewing harvested and disturbed sites. One potential alternative sowing method uses shelter cones, which are open-ended ultraviolet-degradable plastic cones that act as a mini-greenhouse and resulting in better germination and early seedling growth. This study examined the feasibility of shelter cone seeding of black spruce and jack pine on highly productive sites that would normally be regenerated by planting. A field trial was conducted at three geographically separate sites in northwestern Ontario. This report presents the fifth-year performance results from the trial and makes recommendations on the use of shelter cones at high-productivity sites.

This report reviews the temporal and spatial distribution of historical temperature and salinity data in the Newfoundland region bounded by 42 to 55 degrees north latitude and 40 to 60 degrees west longitude, excluding the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and in the Labrador region bounded by 52 to 64 degrees north latitude and 51 to 67 degrees west longitude. The report's horizontal contour maps of the monthly averaged temperature and salinity fields at standard oceanographic depths are based on all available conductivity-temperature-depth, bottle, and bathythermograph data collected from 1910 to 1992. The report also includes contour maps of the monthly averaged bottom temperature and salinity fields for the Newfoundland and Labrador continental shelf areas.

The purpose of this bulletin is to report on the progress achieved under the St. Lawrence Action Plan. Under each of the Action Plan's five objectives, it outlines environmental management indicators which identify actions taken and show the results. This report presents the data collected in late August 1992 on the activities carried out by all partners of both governments involved in SLAP. The objectives examined in the bulletin are the following: to reduce by 90% the liquid toxic waste discharged by the 50 plants targeted for priority action; to prepare remediation plans for contaminated federal sites and restore wetlands; to conserve 5000 additional hectares of habitat and create a marine park; to develop and implement recovery plans for mammals, fish, birds, amphibians, reptiles and plants; and, to determine the state of the St. Lawrence River.

Students' perceptions of independent study

By Linda M. Bell. Guelph, ON : The author, 1993. 77 p. : Bibl. On cover: OERC grant recipient. ON-TERIS ON07439
MICROLOG 95-03847 (1 fiche)

This study reviews, analyzes and reports on students' perceptions of their preparedness for, procedures used in, and concerns regarding independent study programs. States that many school boards' programs for gifted students provide opportunities for the students to pursue independent study projects (Bell, 1986), and that all the OAC courses require a minimum of 20% of the course be completed in the independent study mode. Explains that much is still to be learned about how students learn the processes needed to be successful in independent study. Points out that most primary and many junior level students are provided with opportunities to develop self-initiated problem-solving projects in activity-based classrooms. Explains that this investigation will focus on intermediate and senior level students and will be based on their self-reported perceptions. Discusses special education legislation, and provides the Ontario Ministry of Education's definition of giftedness. Discusses the literature on independent study, and presents the background of self-directed learning in adult education. Examines such issues as teachers' assumptions and personality characteristics for success.

Dans cette étude, on tente de vérifier si le principal avantage du taux de change flexible entre le Canada et les États-Unis, qui est de permettre un ajustement rapide du taux de change réel après un choc asymétrique, se manifeste autant sur le plan régional que sur le plan national. Pour ce faire, on essaie de déterminer si les chocs subis par les différentes régions canadiennes ont une composante commune significative et surtout si celle-ci est plus importante que la composante commune aux chocs subis par les États-Unis. Dans une première étape, on identifie dans les diverses régions canadiennes et aux États-Unis les chocs de demande réels et monétaires ainsi que les chocs d'offre, en imposant certaines restrictions aux effets que ces chocs peuvent avoir à long terme sur le niveau de la production, des prix et des encaisses réelles. Dans une deuxième étape, à partir de l'estimation d'un modèle d'espace d'état, on identifie, pour chacune des régions ainsi que pour les chocs réels d'offre et de demande examinés séparément, une composante commune à l'ensemble des régions canadiennes, une composante commune aux chocs américains et une composante spécifique à chaque région.

Tabu search is an adaptive search technique that aims to explore the solution space intelligently in search of good, and hopefully optimal, solutions. Parallel computer architectures offer the possibility to design procedures that explore the solution space more efficiently. This study examines and compares synchronous parallelization strategies for tabu search. It identifies the most promising parallelization approaches and evaluates the impact on performance and solution quality of some important algorithmic design parameters, including length of the synchronization steps, number of processors, and handling of exchanged information. The authors implement parallelization approaches and compare these approaches by using a tabu search algorithm for multicommodity location-allocation problems with balancing requirements.

This report compiles information published 1978-1993 on the parasites of Canadian fishes. The information is assembled as parasite-host and host-parasite lists and includes 925 named species of parasites distributed among 18 higher taxa. In addition, there are many records of parasites not identified to species level. Of the 1,102 species of Canadian fishes listed by McAllister (1990), parasites are reported for 292 species. The report organizes the parasite-host list on a taxonomic basis and identifies for each parasite species its habitat, site of occurrence in its host, species of host, known geographic distribution within Canadian waters, and the published source of each host and locality record. The host-parasite list is organized according to host taxonomy and is accompanied by data on the known Canadian distribution of the parasites. Both lists include explanatory comments concerning systematics, nomenclature, and notes on other specific items. A supplementary list of references is included to cover other Canadian literature on fish parasites. The work concludes with an index to the parasites and hosts listed.

Systems Variability Analysis Code, Generation 3 (SYVAC3) is a computer program that implements a method called systems variability analysis to analyze the behaviour of a system in the presence of uncertainty. This method is based on simulating the system many times to determine the variation in behaviour it can exhibit. SYVAC3 specializes in systems representing the transport of contaminants, and has several features to simplify the modelling of such systems. This report describes a software object type called Parameter Distribution that is used in SYVAC3 and can also be used independently. The report provides complete specifications for Parameter Distributions and nine subtypes and explains how to use them.

A Tabu search heuristic for the multiprocessor scheduling problem with sequence dependent setup times

By Paulo M. França...et al. Montreal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1995. 16 p. : ill., Bibl. (Publication / Université de Montréal. Centre de recherche sur les transports ; no. 95-16 no. 961) (Publication / Université de Montréal. Département d'informatique et de recherche opérationnelle ; no. 961) MICROLOG 95-03682 (1 fiche)

This study considers the problem of scheduling n jobs on m identical parallel processors, with the objective of minimizing the total execution time. The authors propose a new three-phase heuristic for solving this problem. An initial phase constructs a starting solution which is improved in a second phase by a tabu search method. A post-optimization phase follows, attempting a further improvement in the current solution. To determine whether the proposed method outperforms a previous heuristic, the authors performed numerical tests on a series of randomly generated problems. They also compared the quality of the solutions obtained, taking into account the running times, with the solutions obtained using an exact procedure.

A Tabu search heuristic for the vehicle routing problem with stochastic demands and customers -- Rev.

This paper considers a version of the stochastic vehicle routing problem where customers are present with some probability and have random demands. A tabu search heuristic is developed for this problem. Comparisons with known optimal solutions indicate that the heuristic solves the problem to optimality in the vast majority of cases and deviations from optimality are almost always small.

This study involved the formal statistical testing of a range of hypotheses about the effects of controls on the rental housing market. A data base was assembled from a variety of sources, econometric models appropriate to different categories of hypotheses were developed and estimated using pooled metropolitan area time series or provincial time series, and a large number of tests were carried out. Topics covered are: CMHC's statement of hypotheses; adaptation and elaboration of the hypotheses; data; survey of rent controls; testing the hypotheses; detailed specification and estimation of equations; classification of years by strong or weak upward pressure on rents; estimating the distributions of long-run parameter estimates; the tests; and, summary interpretation of the results.

Wood panels fabricated from solid wood boards (SWB) are becoming increasingly common in such applications as fine furniture, panelling, and concrete formwork. Of particular interest, given wood supply characteristics in British Columbia, are the opportunities for production of SWB panels manufactured from spruce. The envisaged production opportunity would entail manufacturing triple-laid spruce board laminated from solid wood strips, with high-quality lumber on the outer faces and lower quality in the core. This report explores the feasibility of producing a three-ply spruce panel in British Columbia, primarily intended for export to the United States and Asia. The information provided includes an analysis of market demand, the current status of the wood panel industry, investment considerations, financial requirements, an operation plan, and a financial plan.

To determine whether Canada has a higher cost of capital than its international competitors, a series of statistical approaches was used along with interviews of managers in a large number of Canadian companies and their overseas counterparts. Academics, policymakers, and members of the financial community in Canada and abroad were also interviewed. The study used the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and the Stockholder's Required Return Approaches models for the country level and a model developed by Callard, Madden, and Associates for the company level. The study examines the nature of the problem; measuring the cost of capital in Canada; the causes of Canada's high cost of capital; the effects of the high cost of capital; and measures to be taken, including improving access for smaller, innovation-oriented companies and a longer-term solution. Appendices provide supporting documentation on the models used and the selection criteria for Canadian and foreign companies studied.

The simulation model PLANT-PC was developed to aid forest managers in Ontario with their forest renewal problems. The model treats the regeneration process as three separate but interdependent phases of stock production, stock storage, and plantation establishment. During each phase, growth and/or survival of seedlings are simulated according to empirical submodels reflecting the effects of various biological factors as well as management options. The model was calibrated for black spruce, white spruce, and jack pine plantations from the Nipigon, Geraldton, Hearst, Kapuskasing, Timmins, and Wawa districts of Ontario. Application of the model is demonstrated by presenting a detailed example. A simple procedure for calibrating the model to account for local or regional conditions is also provided.

This inventory contains descriptions of measurements and observations made on marine mammals in an area of the British Columbia coast from 1862 to 1991. It includes descriptions of data collected on 17 species of cetaceans, four species of pinnipeds, and on sea otters. Enumerations of animals sighted or killed and identification of species are the most common measurements made in the study area, but the inventory also includes measurements concerning reproduction, morphometrics, food, behavior, age, and physiology. The data descriptions are organized by data sets. The inventory contains 112 such sets, and descriptions of these data include dates and locations of sampling, details of collection and analysis methodology, and a data quality rating. Data sets are indexed by species, measurement type, geographical area, and survey type.

West Ingle area redevelopment plan -- Consolidated

Edmonton (Alta.). Planning and Development Dept. Edmonton : The Dept., 1994. iii, 86 p. : ill., Maps
MICROLOG 95-03686 (2 fiche)

West-Ingle is an older, low-density, residential neighborhood located about 4 kilometers northwest of downtown Edmonton. The area redevelopment plan for West-Ingle presents an overview of the area characteristics along with policies for residential areas, transportation, parks and recreational facilities, commercial districts, the Charles Camell Hospital, and districting adjustments. The plan then outlines the land uses in West-Ingle, giving the area of application, rationale, and specific provisions for discretionary uses. The appendix includes a cross-reference to historic street names in West-Ingle, a neighborhood heritage evaluation checklist form, a list of heritage homes, and a short history of the Westmount and Inglewood districts of West-Ingle.

The Premier Gold Mine is located on the east side of Cascade Creek Valley in the Salmon River drainage system, about one km from the British Columbia/Alaska border. Cascade Creek, which supports chum, pink, coho, and sockeye salmon, joins the Salmon River about 1.5 km downstream from the Fletcher Creek confluence which provides drainage for the mine for Westmin Resources' open pit mine that uses a cyanide leach to extract gold and silver. Tailings are discharged to Cascade Creek above the falls. This study examined sediment characteristics (metal content, metal species, toxicity) and surface water quality at sampling stations above and below potential mine influence.

What have you learned? Co-constructing the meaning of time

Argues that teachers should try to take into account the future their students will encounter, instead of equipping them solely with the resources from the past. Stresses that an emphasis on authority and tradition at the expense of originality and creativity fails to do justice to the transformative nature of learning and to the possibility that this implies for change and improvement, for both the individual and society. Describes the interaction in a grade 3/4 inner city class, where students were studying the topic of time. Details the type of interaction that took place during the development of the topic. Includes examples of dialogues between students and teacher. Concludes by stating that it is in the more familiar patterns of classroom discourse with their peers and teachers that students are enabled to build bridges between specialist discourses and those with which they are familiar from their experiences at home and in the larger community. Notes that classroom discourse, the unit being studied, and education in general are organized in a 3-part structure: initiate-respond-follow-up. Makes recommendations.

Understanding the hydraulic characteristics of rivers is necessary to understand how effluents and their contaminants are mixed and transported, and where they are deposited in rivers. To properly model the transport of contaminants and pollutants within freshwater systems, the mixing or dispersion characteristics must be established. The tracer dye study focused on the calculation of mixing coefficients and travel times using field dye tests on the Peace River between Shaftesbury Ferry and Notikewin River. The test was completed under ice covered conditions in February and March 1993, the period most critical for potential impacts on the aquatic ecosystem.
